Amsterdam, the Netherlands; 3rd July 2017 – AerData, a Boeing Company, are delighted to announce the relocation of their Schiphol office to a newly refurbished, purpose built office space in Hoogoorddreef, Amsterdam Zuidoost, from 3rd July. The new office is 16 KM away from the current location and unites AerData with their parent company, Boeing, who are already established in the Amerika Building.

The relocation comes as a result of the company’s phenomenal growth over the past few years, and switching its expanding operation to new, state-of-the-art offices means the company can further grow to support the market needs.

Commenting on the announcement, Matt Bull, chief executive officer, AerData said, “This move is the latest in the ongoing development of our business. Our new office space will promote a positive and creative atmosphere that allows our team members to excel at delivering excellent products, services, and support to the industry. A successful company is all about the people and the move highlights our commitment to the team.”

The new address is:
